Chysauster

2 - APR 28

CORNWALL

by P. K. BAILLIE REYNOLDS, C.B.E., T.D., M.A., F.S.A., Chief Inspector of Ancient Monuments

HISTORY

CHYSAUSTER is an ancient village of the latest pre-historic epoch. There are several other villages of similar type known in this area of Cornwall, and it may be noted that many of these lie within sight of or in close proximity to a fortified hill-top 'camp'. In the case of Chysauster the hill-fort known as Castle-an-Dinas is but a mile to the east. Whether any political connection may be assumed between the dominating fort and the subsidiary villages must remain a matter of conjecture. Chysauster itself was quite unfortified so far as is known, though some of the similar villages do have surrounding walls.

Nothing is known of the history of these villages from any written sources: it is from excavation that our knowledge of them is derived.

Chysauster consists of eight houses in a compact group of two rows of four each; there are two or three other outlying houses, and to the south-east a subterranean chamber of a type known locally as a fougou; such chambers are found in several other similar Cornish villages, but nothing has so far been found satisfactorily to explain their purpose. In the early 19th century the site seems to have been used occasionally for Methodist 'preachings' and at one time was known as the Chapels. It was not recognised for what it is until 1849, and no excavation was done for many years. Between 1860–70, however, House 6 was examined, and in 1897 House 4; the interiors only were cleared, and the methods of excavation then in use did not produce very satisfactory results. In 1928 the first excavation by modern methods was undertaken in House 3, and the interesting
